A National Single Stalk Cotton Show which will award approximately $10,000 in prizes was the basis of an announcement recently made over WSB, the Atlanta Journal Radio Station by Louis E. Brackeen, Secretary of the Sears Roebuck Agricultural Foundation at Atlanta. In the belief that successful cotton production is built around the producing ability of the single stalk the Agricultural Foundation in co-operation with the Soil Improvement Committee of the National Fertilizer Association will award twenty-eight prizes in the Southeastern territory including the states of Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama. The judges of the show, who will be outstanding cotton authorities from the Southeast, will award to the grower of the best single stalk of cotton in the territory named a cash prize of $500. To the grower of the second best stalk $250, third best $200, fourth $150, and numerous other prizes for the runners up scaling down to $5.00 for the last prize. In the possible event of a tie, duplicate awards will be made. The contest is open to every cotton grower, landlord or tenant, man, woman or child, in the territory named. There is only one condition to the contest. The entry must be selected from a field containing not less than one acre. The cotton when matured will be sent to the Agricultural Foundation at Atlanta and will be judged during the Southeastern Fair where it will be on exhibition during the judging period. Another feature of the show will be the awarding of expense paid educational trips to the county agents and Smith Hughes Vocational Agriculture teachers whose efforts in the county are outstanding. To the four county agents in the territory named through whose efforts are sent in the largest and best number of entries there will be granted all-expense eduwill be awarded to the Smith Hughes teachers who give evidence of the best work in community standardization of varieties by encouraging the growth of one or two varieties best adapted to the soil, climate and market conditions of their respective communities. FARM PRODUCTS THAT LOOK MOST FAVORABLE

An analysis of the government report on the agricu and alfalfa and clover seed is favorable, and that moderate expansion of production is permissable, the Sears-Reebuck Agricultural Foundation points in case of most other products, however, the signs direct farmers to keep production stationary, or even to back up a little, if they wish to avoid is turned, or which should not be increased in 1928, are corn, oats, wheat Book of Mortgages O-3, on page 150, hay, cotton, barley, hogs, poultry, sheep, potatoes, sweet potatoes, tobacco, the said T. M .Medlock, will, on rice, dry beans and peanuts. The same is true of such other crops as cabbage, onions, contaloupes and watermelons. Curtailment, rather than expansion, is needed in commercial plantings of strawberries, grapes, peaches, and citrus fruits. Plantings of apples are not justified except under exceptionally favorable conditions.

Unfortunately, the area in each of the five major crops in 1927 was fully as large as or larger than was needed, so that it is not possible to shift from one of these products to another in order to bring about a better ad justment of production to demand. These five crops range in size from about 100 million acres of corn down to 42 million acres of cotton with rame hay, wheat and oats coming in between No other crop occupies as much as 10 million acres, however. It is possible to correct for any overplanting of these minor crops by shifting acreage into the major crops without materially affecting the output of the latter. It is true that weather conditions cause large variations in crop yields from year to year, and sometimes are responsible for surpluses which depress prices. In the long run however, changes in acreage are most im portant. Over a period of years the decisions which farmers, collectively make as to acreage of various crops and size of breeding berds and tlocks play a larger role than the weather in determining financial results. In making plans for 1928, each farmer must consider the condition relating to his own farm, the Foundation states. If prospects are favorable for any product, not all farmers should expand, and if it is unfavorable it does not follow that all should reduce production. For example, even it no general increase in production of feed crops is justified, each farmer should endeavor to produce his own supply. Likewise, he should plan for a supply of food crops, eggs. milk and meats for home use, irrespective of the market outlook for those products.
